Dear Mr Silverman

The College has stated previously that Tresham has successfully applied for residential planning permission. We now understand that there is no planning permission on the current Rutland College land and that we had misunderstood Terry King's (RCC Deputy Leader) statements on the matter which had led us to state that this was the case.

Terry King (Deputy Leader) has written to the College stating:

'I am aware of having made comment in debate and discussion about two areas of land owned by Tresham. One is an area of land which was included in the Local Plan and which was an allocated site, that is totally different status from being a site with planning permission. The second area of land is the existing college site and it is my stated view that if ever that site came forward for development its location and prior usage would mean that it would not be open countryside nor would it be a "Greenfield" site which means it would have in my opinion a higher ranking in any process that would be used for establishing priority for future permissions.'

We understand that this is different from saying that planning permission exists and are happy to make this correction.

Yours sincerely

Stuart Williams
